Reflections

Thoughts For Transformation

Rev. LeRoy Zemke

Draw nigh to God and he will draw nigh to you.
James 4:8

*To see a World in a grain of sand,
And a Heaven in a wild flower,
Hold Infinity in the palm of your hand,
And Eternity in an hour....
We are led to believe a lie
When we see with, not thro' the eye,
Which was born in a night, to perish in a night,
When the Soul slept in beams of light.*
-William Blake
Auguries of Innocence

A vineyard has a twofold definition. It's a plantation where grapes are grown and tended for the ultimate purpose of winemaking. Also it can be a sphere of activity, especially upon a high spiritual plane. Metaphorically, we (as human beings) are often thought of as vineyardists, the "owners" or keepers of God's Great Kingdom on earth which requires care, tending, pruning, harvesting and, ultimately, realizing the fruit of such labor – an awakening or entry into the spiritual realms of our lives.

Those familiar with the growing of specific varieties of grapes for winemaking purposes tell a fascinating story. Climatic elements such as wind, air quality, sunshine, rain, heat and coolness all contribute to the successful growing of the desired grape.

Soil necessities requiring the "right" mix of PH texture (acidity and alkalinity), fertilizer, richness of chemical elements and nutrients, either occurring naturally or added to the soil, are carefully weighed, measured and studied. Therefore, the "correct" region for growing a specific grape is the "stuff" of years of research and even centuries of grape growing history.

Grapevines must be planted at certain times of the year in order to survive. Certain types require more sunlight early in the day; some more in mid-day; some all day; some more in the later part of the day. Location is therefore essential and, again, carefully plotted.

Some grapes grow quickly; others very slowly. All grapevines need pruning to conserve the energy of the plant and direct their juices toward the flowers and the ultimate formation of the grape berry. If any of these considerations are not understood, are ignored or neglected, the plants do not produce.

Harvesting is still another matter. It's a major matter of timing. Grapes must be at their peak – possessing a quality of sweetness/tartness that will lend themselves to the flavor or flavors ultimately desired.

Finally, curing or aging as one aspect of the complex distilling process, as well as what kind of container the wine is stored in as this curing occurs, affects the color, lightness/darkness and bouquet, and that unique aspect called “character”.

How is all of this relevant to my theme, “Nurturing Our Spiritual Growth”? We humans are so much like grapes, sensitive to the variable elements in our life and the many known and unknown influences we encounter. Yet, grow we must! One teacher put it this way, “We must grow where we are planted.” That effort to grow is a major consideration and all of the aspects of being a vineyardist or caretaker of our own lives is required of us as we awaken, as we become conscious of who we are.

How do we tend the many elements, issues and opportunities of our life? What are some of the key components of opening to our genuine inner nature through understanding of this metaphor?

1. THE WORK OF BEING A VINEYARDIST. Using the metaphor of tending a vineyard as our personal task requires us to know ourselves. How do we actually learn about ourselves? Self-observation and self-reflection bring us into major discovery. But what do we need to understand our life's processes? A single, simple example will suffice.

Diet/food/nutrition: Every living thing needs the “right” mix of food, water, and rest (sleep) to feed and nourish its form. Without proper nutrition or food, our human bodies' biochemical needs are compromised; growth can be stunted, even damaged. Organ development can be arrested; disease can take over. Yes, even death may result if the wrong mix occurs or other factors are considered. The challenge is to learn exactly what foods, how much (or how little) our body actually requires. Often that learning occurs across many years. Eventually we come to understand that we cannot overeat or undereat. We need water daily, consistently. We need rest, sleep, exercise and, yes, relaxation to properly balance and care for our body's needs. And only we can provide all of these elements for ourselves.

2. THE CHALLENGE OF OUR PARTICULAR VINEYARD. In real estate, the stated goal for both the buying and selling of property is summed up in three words: Location – Location – Location. Learning to know something about the landscape of our area and thus the physical community in which we live is essential. Where we live enables us to “grow where we are planted,” but we need to have a positive relationship with our environment. Our home or apartment and the external surrounding's atmosphere such as plants, flowers, trees, etc., all contribute to enabling us to grow in our location.

If we ignore the house or property in which we live, or if we abuse it through neglect or indifference to its requirements, we will discover that we will not feel happy or settled there. If we ignore the plantings, the trees, the very ground itself, then that environment could become toxic and not produce growth or provide a sacred and renewing atmosphere to support our external, or more significantly, our internal lives.

As vineyardists, our “work” is to tend (care for) where we live. Bringing order to our home (house, apartment, condo, whatever) helps in keeping it clean, open and free of clutter, debris, outworn items of clothing, personal effects or other paraphernalia that can accumulate in our lives. This is one of the “many pruning” aspects of the vineyard of our lives.

3. REALIZING RESULTS. As we examine our deeper purposes in life, the ideals we embrace, the goals we seek to realize, the ultimate product of our vineyard, the soul work of our journey is eventually accomplished.

While the fruit of the vine, wine, is the long term goal of our metaphorical vineyard, the results of our personal awakening will come forward as we become more and more open to the energies of the sacred and transcendent in our lives.

All of the caretaking, the honoring of our body, our home, our employment or professional work supports the awakening of who we really are.

It may be argued that our soul’s agenda is different from our physical life. The larger truth, as I see it, is that our soul’s work unfolds in the context of our lives.

Seeing ourselves as a vineyardist or caregiver of our external life helps us to receive the results (the wine) of our entire life’s journey. It’s the essence, if you will, the distillate of our life that we are seeking to embrace, to make our own on all levels of our being. As we are open to our life’s experiences and learn from them as they are presented, we become conscious tenders in our vineyard.

It is critical to choose wisely how we will live and how we will develop the complex relationship needed to open to the revelation of our soul. All of the preparation in the vineyard will serve us (and thus everyone else in our life, even those we do not know personally).

The discovery is not one major insight, but rather a series of insights. The learnings are not exclusively about a problem in the vineyard, the “wrong grapes” (opportunities, marriage partner, or set of circumstances). Rather, the learnings are unfoldings of the soul revealed through the work that the vineyard requires of us and thus the ultimate gifting that it brings ... having a human experience as a spiritual being, rather than having a spiritual experience as a human being.

“The fundamental instinct of life, then, may be summed up thus: as a desire for continued, conscious existence in a state of perpetual enjoyment. . . . Thus do all beings reveal their divine nature. . . . Complexities arise because soul-joy is forgotten, and because people substitute for it the fleeting pleasures of the senses. All things, however, came from Bliss, or God. Eventually, all things must evolve back to that Bliss-state.”
