Reflections

Thoughts For Transformation

Becoming An Extraordinary Person

When I consider Your heavens, the work of Your fingers, the moon and the stars, which You have ordained, What is man that You are mindful of him, and the son of man that You visit him?

Psalm 8 v. 3,4

Rev. LeRoy Zemke

In our western culture, there are an unimaginable number of practical programs in business as well as enormous amounts of money spent to become successful and, hopefully, fulfilled. The language we use is metaphorical such as “dare to dream”, “achieve a lifelong goal or ambition”, “travel to far away places”, “marry the man/woman of our soul’s yearning”, “live a life of service for others”, “become famous” or “become your best person”. These ideas, essentially in effect, support the implication of becoming an extraordinary person, so that all these potential possibilities can be attained, achieved or accomplished.

The question I might pose in consideration of these possible goals is this: Do these pursuits lead to fulfillment, the often illusive experience of happiness and whatever is meant by “an extraordinary person”?

In a deep spiritual sense, each of us is a spark of the Sacred Flame of the Infinite Divine Fire of All Creation. This spark is carried in the heart, sometimes referred to as our innermost spiritual heart, our heart of hearts. As we incarnate, we take on the expression of an individual lifetime, we slowly, step by step, develop the wide range of talents, abilities, physical, mental, emotional and spiritual that are part of this innate self. Our biology (heritage, genetics and DNA) define our body, our temperament and our many powerful urges. Correspondingly, society, culture, religion, family and education (in all of its varied and many forms) shape our attitudes, beliefs and viewpoints. However, as incredibly rich a tapestry as the above may paint, it is an unbelievably tiny picture of who we are.

Many of the inspired leaders in science, psychology, business and the profound spiritual teachings across the centuries, (attributed to Jesus the Christ, Gautama Buddha, Patanjali and a host of others) have revealed we are children of an Almighty Omnipresent God. The greatness that lives within us is beyond imagination, beyond definition, beyond measurement. What then are some of the many steps of the process of becoming an extraordinary person? Allow me to suggest some very abbreviated points that may help to reveal something of our essential nature that lead us deeper into our experience of the extraordinary.

Nearly every major religious spiritual teaching encourages us to become reflective about our lives. This means to stop doing ... and allow time and a place to become inner directed ... a simple day off from chores, duties and commitments where we can think (or not think). It’s a retreat from engaging in responsibilities and an allowing of ourselves to rest, if needed renew and genuinely relax. It’s not about doing, such as exercise or going to a gym or spa, or fasting for health purposes. It is about being quiet, turning off our incessant connection to the media and, in a very real sense, the outer world, to “what’s happening” and just being with ourselves.

It’s a huge step. One day may reveal to us that we need a second day, a third day and possibly even more. It is about a discovery that helps to define our inner world more clearly and to begin to change where our focus in life may be off, not fulfilling and not leading us in the direction of happiness or the oft sought soul fulfillment.

Declutter, release, let go of all that is done, finished and completed. A storage unit of collections, unopened boxes of our earthly stuff may need to be given to a local charity. How about books we buy and never read? Cds we have acquired and have found valuable but now we are finished with and moved on from the material? Music videos and all and every kind of electronic material that’s no longer a part of our enjoyment. While these areas represent only a tiny fraction of our life interests and involvements, the big question to ask might be how does it serve me now? Do I still use, need or find purpose for it in my on-going experience?

The fine art of release has gifts to offer, and, until we actually do the work of release, we will never know the power it unleashes once we are free to move on. Memorabilia reminds us of treasured memories and moments we can enjoy over and over and over. But unless we are really open to our own inner nature to receive it’s connection to the sacred which surrounds us everywhere, we remain static and often stuck to what was, what used to be and why it was important to us. It’s a powerful force that pulls us to our past and all of our attachments. Releasing frees us to gently move on to be aware of what awaits us.

Claiming our uniqueness in life’s unfolding rhythm. The ubiquitous news of the media clutters our daily world and informs us of what it deems valuable. What is the “news” of our inner world? Do we seek yet to discover another story to tell/write? Another romance to experience? A new culture to learn about? Do we yearn to learn a new language, visit a land populated with people and a culture that is completely unknown to us? Pause ... to answer such questions ...

Uniqueness can be thought of as the ownership of our very own soul, not just our likes, dislikes, our favorite foods, fashions or friendships. It's the exploration of our spirit in study, in meditation, in research, time spent with art, perhaps music, theatre or politics, efforts to be involved in service to life and thus to stretch into the unknown boundaries we have placed upon our lives. Our very own soul has a song to sing, a vision to live into and thus a revelation to bring to the world, our very personal world and the world in which we live.

Purpose, purpose, purpose ... what is the meaning of a deep inner purpose? Is it karma or dharma? Karma essentially can be referred to as unfinished internal work such as learning how to deeply be self reliant or unconditional in our life journey. Dharma is perhaps what very subtly calls to us to accomplish, or learn, or do or become in the world of flesh form.

We may hear an orator speak about his life experience and recognize that the theme of his life is very similar to ours and that we might find a way to share our own message, as writer, speaker, educator, business person, artist, etc.

Purpose is less about finding value in our lives through the guise of being male/female/transgender or whatever next term may be uncovered. It is about being honorable, truthful, living from integrity, being able to be the best man/woman we can be. I tend to believe that it's not about fame or becoming known as a leader, teacher, priest or healer. It is more about being better than we were yesteryear, yesterday or before. We are a better person now, at this moment in our lives than we were last month or last year.

Extraordinary - in a more spiritual sense is deeply about our talents, our skills, our abilities and how we are able to use them daily, weekly, within our lives. Being extraordinary is not about striving to be a better parent, partner, brother, sister, friend or leader, to always push toward excellence. It is about being present in our life to show up strong, steady, truthful and respectful toward ourselves as well as toward all of the people who are a part of our lives...wherever we are in the world.

When others make mistakes or whatever such actions may be called earning a "mistake" label, do we rush in to support or to judge and join a chorus of naysayers? When a loved one fails again to pass a test, or loses a job, or condemns us for a stand we take on a moral, legal, political or spiritual issue are we able to be caring, loving or unconditional and thus be part of a solution rather than a shrill voice so frustrated that we leash pain and judgment upon the other?

For each of us, becoming is an active verb. It is not a finished act. In a spiritual sense, I believe it is an unfolding. The world of nature often has apt metaphors for consideration. As we watch a fruit tree form new twigs and branches that promise to form buds, flower and bear fruit, we must be patient to observe the process, week by week and month by month. The right combination of nutrient, heat, light, cold or chill is necessary for the fruit to be fully available. It can be rushed yes, in greenhouses, in special environments, of course. But, as we have discovered, or rediscovered food that is organic may be safer for the body and our human form ...than that which is "forced" into ripeness to meet a societal or seasonal or communal demand.

Finally, humans are not to be compared to plants. Plants have their evolutionary journey. We as humans have ours. Our learning of our inner and outer work in the world is a discovery, an unfolding. It has its own rhythm, its own pattern. While we may desire to be like Shakespeare, or Mother Teresa of Calcutta, or Martin Luther King Jr. in America, our deeper work is to fulfil our soul's yearning right where we are. It is the song of our soul, the expression of our innate nobility as we express who we are, one step, one experience after another.

Yoga Philosophy and the Basis of Hinduism

Sunday, March 10
12:30 - 1:45 PM

$10 per talk

(4 PART SERIES – to be continued in May)

Experience these talks packed with information. Yoga is a philosophy that may be practiced by one of any religion. The origin of yoga is intertwined with the Indian subcontinent. Hindus actually have no name for their religion. Instead, the system of beliefs, scriptures, and customs forms a complete way of life known as Sanatana Dharma: the Eternal Way. Come and learn about these fascinating topics. Each participant receives a hand-out.

In this class, Hindu Gods and Goddesses, we will discuss 'Forms of the formless Unity' and how these energies speak to us today?

Linn Sennott has studied yoga (both the physical practice and the philosophical underpinnings) for 45 years and taught for 25. She has been on the faculty of several yoga teacher trainings. As a retired university professor, Linn is skilled at synthesizing complex material and presenting it in a readily accessible form.
